How did you find your position?

I found and applied to this position on the SEO jobs database, which I help to maintain!

How have you balanced your school and work responsibilities?

My job and my academic work use different types of attention, since one is administration, creative work, and outreach, while the other is mostly reading long texts and writing in an academic voice. This actually creates its own balance for me and helps me rejuvenate between shifts of either one.

Describe your typical day at work:

My work at the SEO includes administrative tasks such as registering jobs for work study and responding to email inquiries. It also includes creative tasks like putting together this monthly newsletter. I've gotten to learn about the work that goes into the employer and university side of things, and it's been great to get to know the people behind the scenes!

What are your personal keys to success?

Being honest with myself about how much work I can do has helped a lot, as well as looping in my supervisors so they know what to expect from me. Also, asking for help, clarification, or objectives is a skill I've been practicing and that has been helpful, rewarding, and not as scary as I thought.

What made you apply?

The SEO had helped me understand the hiring process for past jobs I've had, and I wanted to help make employment information accessible for everyone. The office is so friendly, and over my undergraduate years helped me feel less intimidated by the job application process.
